“We do not learn from experience. We learn from reflecting on experience”
John Dewey

CDGIMS is completing twelve years of passionate, vibrant educational journey, which has enriched our professional lives. Our institute has always excelled in delivering outstanding learning experiences. Management education should help to inculcate interpersonal skills like communication, expression, presentation and so on. These enormous learning opportunities have transferred our academic culture into the learning organization.

We have enabled collaborative learning culture for students with the help of many quizzes, competitions, group discussions, reading club etc. Such activities help our students to sharpen their System Thinking skills.

Entrepreneurship skills require innovative minds. With design thinking workshops, innovation cell activities and Entrepreneurial lecture series, our students learn different Mental Models.

Team events, study tours and interclass competitions help students to develop Leadership skills. Before entering corporate world such exposures with shared vision are the key factors for building successful careers.

Our faculties and team members continuously update themselves with new skillsets, which emphasize lifelong learning experiences. All these elements are key ingredients of the learning organization.

Reflection is CDGIMS newsletter, which will throw light on all such activities happening at our campus. Another interesting aspect of our newsletter will be Student's corner where students will express themselves with their own reflection of ongoing life experiences.

Our work is a reflection of the quality of our life we live. We are confident, Vibrant and Joyful, in experiencing new things at CDGIMS. This will reflect in our newsletter all the time ahead !!

With best wishes,

Editorial team, Reflection

❖ Past The Past

Who doesn't love walking down the memory lane? Some may love to but some may not. Memories are weird. They are meant to put a smile on our face on recollecting them but they often leave us with moist eyes. Some of them may be good to cherish but some may keep on haunting us for a long time.

Good memories can mentally uplift us for a while during rough times and make us optimistic and feel hopeful in anticipation of better times in the future. Bad memories, on the other hand can play a major role in either MAKING you or BREAKING you, It depends upon how you perceive the situation.

Why is it that most of the times our mind recalls bad times over the good ones? We mostly deal or react emotionally to an adverse situation rather than being practical and rational about it. The mental battles fought during the situation often leave us bruised, wounded or completely tear us apart.

Calm down, stabilize yourself, take your lesson from it and try to move on. I know you gave every inch of yourself into it, you poured your soul into it, it wasn't your fault, but if it was, keep your ego aside, confess it and lighten the burden you've been carrying for so long. There's never a point in crying over the spilt milk. The more you aggravate your wound by overthinking and over analyzing things, the longer you will take to heal. There's no need to prove anything to anyone. Your inner peace is more important than anything. It may take days, weeks, months or even years to heal from these wounds but it is not impossible to do so. This is the time to take a look at yourself and what you hold within, unleash it, emerge stronger than ever and once you heal, rock those scars like tattoos and let them symbolize your immense strength.

You cannot expect life to be a bed of roses, It is necessary for those prickly thorns to pop in to maintain the natural balance and vice versa. This is the unending cycle of life. You have to conquer those thorns and find your own way through them to your destination. Like they say "everything happens for a reason" or "everything happens for good", you never know what the universe has been planning for you. You cannot change the past but you can definitely change your future. People come and go, bad times end, good times roll in, But in order to see what the universe holds for you, you have to look for a silver lining, never lose hope and learn to see past the past, the choice is yours, to MAKE yourself or to BREAK yourself!
